Chirping Cricket

In June of that year my bank account showed the magnificent sum of $23.45 to my credit. Any idea of continuing with my education in graduate school looked like a forlorn hope. Of course I needed a job so that I could have a roof over my head and at least something resembling three square meals a day. I bought a morning paper and went through the help wanted section.

One advertisement caught my attention. It was for a night clerk in a large summer hotel. That would give me the day free. I could read up on my work and have some time for relaxation. But best of all, it included room and board. I went to the agency. There was the matter of references. I gave them the name of the Dean of the Graduate School and two of my professors.

The man in charge of hiring asked me several questions about myself, family connections and background. He seemed satisfied and to my surprise gave me a ticket on the train that took you to a famous summer resort. So the next day with all my worldly possessions packed in a valise, I headed for the southland. Since my funds were limited, I made lunch and took it with me.

Twenty eight hours later I arrived at the destination. There was a bus that passed the hotel and my finances went down fifteen cents. A letter had been given to me and when I arrived at the hotel I contacted the assistant manager.

"The work isn't hard for the next month," he explained. "Because we really don't start to fill up until then. You will be sort of my assistant and I will show you what to do."

At nine in the evening I went on my shift and remained until six the next morning. At midnight a lunch, consisting of some cold cuts and coffee, was brought to me by one of the bell boys. Then at six in the morning, when I went off duty, I had my breakfast. I slept until twelve and had lunch. Then the rest of the afternoon I was free.

My work consisted of checking in people that arrived late, also of taking care of complaints. At the end of two weeks, the assistant manager spoke to me.

"You are doing very well. I have Wednesday off all day and night. So that means that on that day of the week when you are on you have my power to take care of complaints and handle routine matters. Only in the case of a big emergency are you to disturb either Mr. Lepinary, the manager, or Mr. Sullivan, the president of the hotel."

Things were peaceful until that day when Mr. Carl Tyson checked into the hotel. We were starting to fill up. He was a man of about seventy and came all by himself. Dave Fox, who was on the afternoon shift checked him in. When I came for the night shift, Dave gave me a friendly warning.

"I can always spot those characters," he informed me. "The ones that are going to be a nuisance. Always demanding things from you and making life impossible. This Carl Tyson looks just the kind. Bet he keeps you on edge all night long. Good luck to you."

At ten o'clock the phone in room 146 rang. Mr. Tyson was on the other end of the line. Betty, who was the night operator took the message.

"Send a bell boy up here right away," demanded Carl Tyson.

Lou Hoyt went up to the room and ten minutes later he came over to me. You took one look at his face and knew he had been through some kind of terrible ordeal.

"That guy in room 146 must be all mixed up. He told me that there was a cricket in his room that kept chirping and wouldn't let him sleep. Either get rid of the cricket or get him another room. He made me look under the bed, in the closets and in the desk for the cricket. I couldn't find any cricket. He got very angry and wants to see the manager."

This was Wednesday so it meant I was acting as sort of assistant manager. I went up to the room and knocked. He opened the door.

"Who are you?" he demanded.

"Frank Sillman at your service," I smiled.

"Come on in," he ordered. "No sooner did that bell boy go down than the cricket started all over again to chirp. Get that cricket out of here."

So down on my knees I went. Under the bed I looked. Then into the closet. And in the desk. I just repeated what the bell boy had done. To satisfy the old man.

"No cricket can be found," I said.

"Are you doubting me?" he challenged.

Who wants to get into an argument with an old man who is a guest at the hotel? So I did say what seemed very sensible.

"Room 148 which is on the left is empty. I can let you sleep there tonight. Tomorrow morning we can move all your belongings into that room."

He was satisfied and I gave him the key which I had taken with me in order to meet this situation. Then I went downstairs and relaxed for about forty minutes.

At eleven o'clock the phone in room 148 rang. Betty answered it and Mr. Tyson was on the other end of the phone.

"Send a bell boy up to room 148," he shouted. "That cricket has been following me."

Jack Hartman went up and came down all upset. He and Lou Hoyt came over to me. Jack did the talking.

"Same fellow that Lou went up to see. The one you changed to room 148. He wants me to get the cricket out or give him another room. I think he's getting his blood pressure up. Want to go up and see if you can find the cricket that isn't?"

I took one long sigh, took the key to room 144 off the rack and paid my second visit to Mr. Tyson.

"You again," he greeted. "I don't like the way those bell boys act — as though they doubted the cricket existed. I may be an old man but I got a clear head on my shoulder. Get rid of the cricket or find me another room where I can sleep."

Down on my knees I went to peep under the bed, then in the closets and in the desk for a very elusive chirping cricket. But I couldn't find him. The cricket was probably enjoying the entire procedure.

"No cricket can be found," I admitted. "But room 144 is empty. I can let you sleep there tonight. Tomorrow morning we move all your belongings into the room."

"You may not be able to find that cricket," he conceded, "But at least the service is good."

So he went into room 144 and I went downstairs. Betty took one look at my tired face.

"If he calls again, that ought to finish you," she grinned. "He's got crickets on his brain."

"Not necessarily so," I said. "There could be an elusive chirping cricket."

An hour later the phone rang. This time the bell boys drew lots to see who was to go up to room 144 and go hunting for a cricket that wasn't there.

"Stop kidding, fellows," I scolded. "The object is to give good service. I will take key 150 with me and go up myself right now. But if I don't come down within an hour, get the rescue squad out to help me."

Mr. Tyson was very angry when I came into his room. He pointed a finger at me.

"I am beginning to suspect that you or somebody else deliberately got a special cricket to follow and annoy me. One more change of room. Then I check out of here. Believe me, the management will be sorry if I leave."

"Let's go to room 150 now," I retorted, "and if the cricket is here, it will follow us. I will be ready for him. In fact I am willing to sit in your room and wait for that elusive chirping cricket. Is that good or bad service?"

"Good service," he said. "You come with me to the new room. As we went to room 150 I noticed he was carrying a blue blanket. All hotel blankets are gray."

"Why don't you use our blankets?" I wanted to know.

"I suffer from an allergy," he explained. "That is a special blanket I had made for myself. I always take it with me."

I took the blanket from him and opened it gently. Out came one cricket who started to chirp. We both laughed and there was no longer any tension in the air.

"I have the answer to the mystery," he said. "I went this afternoon to the south end of the beach and rested on the blanket. When I folded it, I must have trapped the poor little cricket then."

The net result was that he told the manager how wonderful I had been. Later I learned he was Carl Tyson, the shipping millionaire. He helped me finish my university education. I am grateful to his memory. But why wasn't I worried about a cricket that wasn't there — and yet was there? Because my field of specialization at the University happened to be the Life Cycle of the Chirping Cricket.

My name is Charles Atlas. Of course, I can't promise that you'll win the title of "World's Most Perfectly Developed Man," as I did. But I do say that I believe I can make a mighty powerful He-Man out of you — in a very short time. In fact, you can prove it to yourself in 7 days. At my risk, of course. And I have good reason for believing I can do it. Because during the last 30 years I have turned many thousands of weaklings — fellows who were ashamed of their bodies — into beautifully-proportioned human dynamos of strength, energy, and tireless endurance . . . with the kind of muscular development that needn't take "back talk" from any one. My big free book will tell you how my secret of Dynamic Tension may be able to do such a job for you. Where shall I send your copy? There's not a bit of cost or obligation on your part. So mail the coupon now.
